

Sinclair Broadcasting is allegedly planning to force all of their stations to air a politically biased documentary called "Stolen Honor".

Programming of this nature is not appropriate on the public airwaves and in no way serves the public interest. Certainly there is a place for opinion driven programming but it should be labeled as such and there should be some effort to air an opposing point of view.

Sinclair's actions clearly demonstrate the danger in allowing large corporations to control major segments of the airwaves. If this type of ownership is to be allowed, the FCC must play a strong role in making sure the public's interests are protected. This should include enforcing existing rules and making sure the renewal process is more than a mere formality.
